

AI-ASSISTED

Campaign Workflow

A consumer sentiment analysis and campaign strategy for EADEM's Le Chouchou Lip Softening Balm.

KENEISHA SANAP

Marketing Strategy & Campaign Planning
New York · 2026

The Brand

I

A fairly new name that has only recently entered the social media IT girl's zeitgeist. EADEM positions itself as a modern, culturally forward, and artistically original company. On its website you will find calls that appeal to a multi-cultural audience: products named after international food delicacies, models that represent New York IT girls, and surprisingly, a board titled “Topic of Conversation”.

Here, visitors will find a collection of topics that link to individual substack articles largely discussing immigrant experiences with self-care and identity. The authors tie it back to EADEM products, strategically embedded in their insightful paragraphs using hyperlinks which take audiences to their EADEM website.

Plate i. “Topic of Conversation” — EADEM's Substack essays.

Le Chouchou

II

Plate ii. The silver tube — a utilitarian approach to skincare.

EADEM's Le Chouchou Lip Softening Balm became an instant hit on TikTok beauty sub-cultures. Niche influencers began recommending this unique silver lip treatment in their “My 10 Essentials” video rundowns. The exterior structure of Le Chouchou represents a utilitarian approach to skincare, combined with its internal formulation of effective ingredients.

Appealing to a new generation of AI-esque design with minimalism and an almost-industrial look, this lip treatment creates a much-needed illusion of artistry in makeup. Le Chouchou is the (metaphorically) upper-echelon of lip balms and tints, selling for a humble $24.00 per piece (before tax).

Consumer Profile

III

Diverse women and queer people who are trend-forward. Aged 20-30 yrs, with a lower-middle class to upper-middle class income. They want to be perceived as artistic, culturally conscious, and position themselves as having unique tastes.

Consumers are usually university students or employed and live in big cities which have a culture of diversity and creativity. They want to signal that they are well-rounded individuals with an IT girl personality.

Plate iii. "Taking over your FYP" — EADEM's own framing.

Competitors

IV

DIRECT

Ole Henriksen

The POUT PRESERVE HYDRATING PEPTIDE LIP TREATMENT by Ole Henriksen, which is backed by LVMH, is a direct competitor for the Le Chouchou Lip Softening Balm. Consumers usually compare the two, with users recommending the Ole lip treatment for lip hydration instead of EADEM's.

INDIRECT

Summer Fridays

An indirect competitor for staple lip products. Where EADEM markets itself as a skincare essentials brand, Summer Fridays has already become the household staple for everyday lip products.

Where the AI Started

V

Using Claude to make an analysis it tells me:

“the product isn't failing,
the marketing frame is.”

Claude Opus 4.8

Despite a solid brand identity, AI suggests that audiences are confused about what exactly this lip ‘treatment’ is. It is marketed both as a lip balm, a lip gloss, a lip tint, AND a lip treatment. AI thinks this is the core issue — that the mode of lip product is not clear.

B U T

Instead of this being a “framing” issue as AI surmised, I believe that it is a strategic choice.

Claude helped me pinpoint where a potential issue could be, but manual research gave me more insight into the root cause.

The confusion isn't a mistake. It's a strategic choice.

The product would have to be extraordinary for a simple lip gloss to be $24.00, especially for early-adopters to get involved with yet another beauty product in an already saturated market.

Audience retention is driven by visual value — like a user showing just how glossy their lips look after using Le Chouchou in the shade Sakura Shaved Ice. This might leave potential consumers with a little confusion on the nature of this product (lip gloss? lip tint?) which then translates to curiosity and increases website traffic.

Consumer Perceived Value

VI

Lip balms rank among the categories consumers are least willing to splurge on. McKinsey finds that products which “address key concerns or have meaningful performance differentiation” are the ones that entice a splurge — and that consumers now name product quality as the top reason for a beauty purchase.

Due to the increasing market saturation through E-Commerce in North America, beauty products need to exhibit novelty, storytelling, and a visible change after application to remain memorable on fast-moving platforms like TikTok.

Source: McKinsey & Company, State of Beauty 2025.

CPV

After an audience member is influenced to go buy the product, they are only converted to a customer if they weigh the CPV (Consumer Perceived Value) to be a net positive.

On finding out that this is a comprehensive lip treatment, which includes almost all aspects of a great lip essential for a decent price point, consumers are sure to be converted into a customer.

What the Data Actually Showed

VII

SOURCE	SENTIMENT	SCALE
Sephora	Creates dryness and irritation after use	200+ negative reviews on adverse effects of lip treatment
	Texture after application is sticky and cheap	100+ negative reviews on the lack of value for money
	Thought it was a lip gloss, when it actually is a lip tint	Couldn't find any significant reviews with this sentiment
TikTok	Make lips flaky and dehydrated	8-10 videos with direct user complaints. 50k+ likes, 100+ comments agreeing
	Sticky Texture	Not enough videos to corroborate
	Thought it was a lip gloss, when it actually is a lip tint	Not enough videos to corroborate
Reddit	Exfoliates and peels skin	12 negative responses to thread on Eadem lip treatment
	Texture	1-2 mentions of the product not being worth the procedure to quality
	Thought it was a lip gloss, when it actually is a lip tint	Not mentioned

Across all three platforms, the AI's "gloss vs. tint" hypothesis could not be corroborated.

The Real Root Cause

VIII

The issue isn't a simple marketing mishap. Le Chouchou markets itself as a "Lip Softening Balm", failing to highlight its exfoliating properties which dry-out the skin barrier, with an increase in adverse symptoms reported by consumers with sensitive and dry skin.

It's both a lip hydrator and a lip exfoliant, creating an awkward situation for application. Users also noted that exfoliants should not be used during the day as it leaves the skin vulnerable to UV damage and dryness, which makes the lip tint factor irrelevant during nighttime use.

Additionally, the directions of use are unclear as well, with users applying it several times a day assuming that it functions as a normal lip gloss with added features.

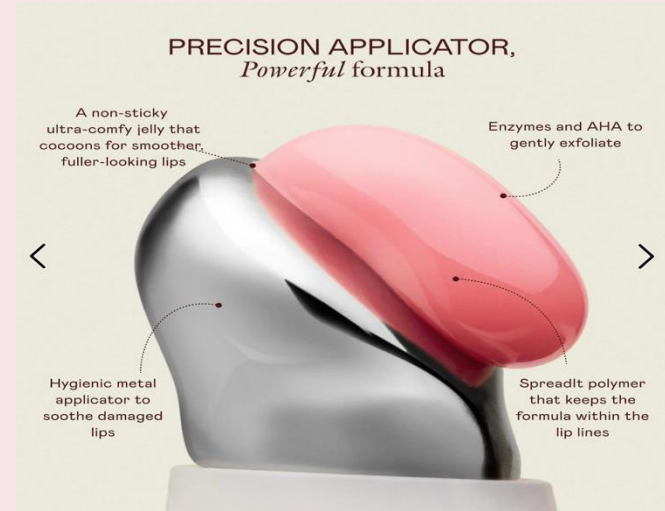

Plate iv. The exfoliant, disclosed here — but not in the name.

The Solution

IX

EADEM needs to know its target audience and leverage its marketing strategy to reach them.

Audiences would be better equipped with what to expect from the product if a marketing campaign geared toward lip exfoliants is created to suit consumers that are looking for a 2 in 1 hybrid.

Rather than masking Le Chouchou's exfoliant properties, EADEM can highlight why this product is great for a night out. This would intuitively combine all of the product's functions, while ensuring that no new consumer is blindsided.

REFRAME

FROM

A lip gloss you reapply
all day.

TO

A 2-in-1 hybrid, made for a night out.

TikTok as a Source of Knowledge

X

55%

of U.S. adult TikTok users now say they regularly get news on the platform

Source: Pew Research Center, Sept. 2025

TikTok is now being used as a source of knowledge. Creators are shifting to edutainment, with informational, helpful, and knowledge-based content across all fields of interest. This includes skincare and self-care.

It is no surprise that EADEM is aware of this, and markets products on their website accordingly — i.e. the substack article signals opinion leadership.

Ad Copy Variants

XI

Generated by Claude based on my Solution Analysis.

A Occasion-led
"Your pre-going-out lip step, sorted."

Tests: does anchoring to an occasion set correct expectations?

B Hybrid/function-led
"A lip peel that leaves color behind."

Tests: does naming the exfoliant upfront build trust vs. scare off?

C Ritual + guidance
"How to actually use your Le Chouchou."

Tests: does explicit usage guidance reduce the "I used it wrong" complaints?

The AI Log

XII

AI OUTPUT	MY DECISION	MY REASONING
Variant A (occasion-led)	Keep + Edit	The language sounds superficial and generated. It is also different from the brand voice — EADEM is straightforward. It needs less gimmicky language, and more of an action-based approach.
Variant B (transparency)	Keep + Edit	This is a great way to combine an explanation of the product, as well as the how to. Changes need to be made to make the content present as more relevant, niche, and genuine.
Variant C (guidance)	Cut	Based on reviews, the peel-off effect while sleeping isn't an ideal ritual. Users are better off applying/layering other hydrating products with Le Chouchou during a night out to avoid the dryness.

My Take on the Copy Variants

XIII

VARIANT A · OCCASION-LED

“Lip essentials for a night out as a 25 y/o dermatologist”

The influencer pulls out her makeup bag and displays the product by showing viewers the before and after. Also highlights the chic metal top and design. Briefly mentions the ingredients and the combination of their uses + how they work.

Le Chouchou might just be the lip treatment you were missing. It exfoliates, hydrates, and tints your lips with a glossy glassy finish. Made with ingredients that actually do all the work for you in just one application.

VARIANT B · TRANSPARENCY

“What is this supposed to be??”

The content creator gives her take on Le Chouchou by delving into the misconception related to the product. She mentions how it's actually supposed to be used, and how it's many treatments in one tube. She demonstrates the effect after application and emphasizes the quality of the product.

Le Chouchou isn't hiding what it is: a gentle exfoliating treatment, hydrating gloss, and a buildable tint. Hibiscus enzymes smooth, açai butter softens, Sakura Shaved Ice finishes. Skincare-grade, shine included.

AI builds the foundation. Judgment builds the strategy.

Using AI as a buildable foundation for research is useful and saves time. However, key insights like human experience, concerns, and cultural relevance are lost to AI analysis. This is where I was able to leverage my own knowledge, experience, and complex understanding of interrelated social phenomena to most accurately reach a beneficial strategy for improvement.

Closing the gap between what consumers expect versus what they get means that the product has to retain its CPV. This can be done by using marketing strategies intuitively in collaboration with rising trend cycles and audience interests.